Tiger at the top (of the market)

Long time subscribers will recall that WWR published a report on December 14, 2009 titled "The Tiger Ticker Tracker." We displayed seven different charts comparing Tiger's wins, majors, PGA tour winnings, etc. to the Dow. They moved in lock step, the euphoria with Tiger, his success and the bull market through the period of time from when he turned pro in 1996 to the date of that publication in 2009. We've uploaded that report to our current reports page so that you for your reading pleasure as it is now once again relevant.

It is of course no coincidence that the timing of the culmination of his comeback from his last major in 2008 to the 2019 Masters Champion, which some are referring to as the greatest comeback in the history of American sports, arrives at the same time that the market is topping in the greatest comeback in the history of the stock market from the 2009 lows to present.

Tiger Woods is a bull market icon and the market tops when he is at his best. Tiger turned pro in 1996 and his success rocketed with the market in the 90's capped by his (and golf's) greatest accomplishments of all time.

The Tiger Slam of 2000-2001 marked the time when Tiger became the first and only golfer to be the reigning champion of all four majors simultaneously, thus the “Tiger Slam.” The market, of course topped right on cue in 2000. What followed was an 80% drop in the NASDAQ, a 77% loss in the NASDAQ and a 55% collapse in the S&P to the 2002 lows.

In 2008, miraculously Tiger the US Open, which would turn out to be his last major (until now) on one leg, much like the spent bull market which was on its last leg and had already topped a year earlier in 2007 which preceded the stock market collapse of 2008 which paralleled Tiger’s collapse. Again, see all these details and more in the Tiger Ticker Tracker report from 12/14/09. What followed this accomplishment was a 54% crash in the Dow and NASDAQ and 69% drop in the S&P to the 2009 low.

Tiger competed for the title in the Fed Ex cup, the US and British Opens in the fall of 2018 just as the market was topping in August (NASDAQ), September (S&P), and October (Dow) of 2018. Tiger won the Tour Championship on September 24, 2018, right in the middle of the previous topping process. Of course those were smaller highs just as the Tour Championship is a smaller accomplishment than the Masters, one of the four majors. The fact that Tiger is once again on top is a sign that the market is also topping. The market crashed after the 2000 “Tiger Slam” high, and once again in 2008 after Tiger’s miraculous “one legged” victory as the market was on its last leg too.

It’s 2019 and Tiger just accomplished the “greatest comeback in the history of American Sports.” If history is any indicator, we should prepare for a decline equal to that of 2000-2002 and 2007-2009 soon.
